THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA GREENSBORO

Inspire. Change.
UNCG was founded in 1891 as the State Normal and Industrial School, later the Woman’s College of the University of North Carolina, and, ultimately, the University of North Carolina Greensboro.

It was established to meet the need of the North Carolina public education system to have an institution devoted to educating teachers.

UNCG still serves as a premier teaching university by offering many doctoral degrees in education, arts and sciences.
UNCG is located in the scenic and historic city of Greensboro, North Carolina.

UNCG is on a 77 hectare campus nestled close to the city center of Greensboro.

Numerous parks, forested areas, watersheds, and open grasses permeate and surround the UNCG campus.
The UNCG campus serves over 17,000 students

A variety of degree programs attract many non-traditional students such as part-time and evening degree-seeking individuals

The Elliott University Center, shown here, is the center of student activity
UNCG has a tremendous international program attracting over 200 exchange students each semester.

The International Programs Center is located in the historic Foust Building, pictured here.

Built in 1892, Foust is listed in the National Registry of Historic Sites.
UNCG’s richly diverse student body is complimented by the international community.

On-campus housing creates a enriching environment in which international students can live and learn.

Numerous events and excursions help our international students get to know more about the community, the Piedmont, and North Carolina.
Extensive, modern facilities offer students a variety of learning opportunities.

Shown here is the newly named Patricia Sullivan Science Building.

This facility contains over 24 state of the art laboratories, a greenhouse, and a 300 seat, multi-media auditorium.
○ UNCG is considered a walking campus because everything is accessible by a short walk

○ College Avenue is a pedestrian boulevard that bisects the campus

○ Dining, entertainment, natural areas, and living quarters surround College Avenue
Among UNCG’s many great facilities is the School of Music, shown here.

The School of Music is considered one of the best institutions of music instruction in the United States.

The facilities include an organ hall, recital halls, over 100 practice rooms, and a comprehensive music library which holds the largest collection of solo cello music in the world.
A bronze statue of Minerva stands in the center of the UNCG campus.

Minerva, the Roman goddess of wisdom, represents UNCG’s commitment to value driven education.

The statue is among many pieces of rare and compelling outdoor art in and around the UNCG campus.
The picturesque architecture of UNCG has become iconographic to the city of Greensboro.

Many beautiful and historic buildings are mixed with modern facilities.

The brick architecture is typical of the South and blends well with the natural landscapes.
